International Religious Freedom Act: State Department and Commission are Implementing Responsibilities but Need to Improve Interaction

Congress passed this act in 1998 to promote international religious freedom, among other purposes. The Act established within State the Office of International Religious Freedom, headed by an Ambassador-at-Large. The Act also established the United States Commission on International Religious Freedom and outlined primary responsibilities for both State and USCIRF. The U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom Reform and Reauthorization Act of 2011 required the GAO to report on matters related to the U.S. promotion of international religious freedom. This report assesses both the nation's and USCIRF's implementation of its primary responsibilities established in the Act. It also deals with the nation's and USCIRF's interaction to promote religious freedom and the Non-Governmental Organization's views on U.S. efforts to promote religious freedom.
