Discover the Untold Story of America’s Federal Courts

While the Constitution places the judicial power in “one Supreme Court, and in such inferior Courts as the Congress may from time to time ordain and establish,” it is essential to understand that “inferior” denotes their rank below the Supreme Court—not their importance or quality.

This book, illustrating the fascinating 235-year history of America’s Federal Trial and Appellate Courts, is the first book to offer a comprehensive, court-by-court and state-by-state account of these vital institutions. Unlike other books that analyze court decisions, this book meticulously details and analyzes:

• The creation and evolution of federal trial and appellate courts from 1789 to 2024
• The increase in the number of judges and the development of court jurisdiction
• Former federal courts, including those abolished or merged into existing structures
• Federal statutes affecting the courts

Explore the rich statutory history of courts both still in existence and those that have been abolished. Sourced from the 296 volumes of the United States Statutes at Large, federal statutes in the United States Code, and the federal rules of civil, criminal, and appellate procedure, this book is a necessity for anyone interested in the history of the federal courts.

ALABAMA

Alabama became a state in 1819.

In 1820, the District of Alabama was created with a district court. The district was not then placed within any circuit. Because the District of Alabama did not then have a circuit court, the judge of the district court exercised the trial court jurisdiction of a circuit court. Congress conferred that authority indirectly by giving the judge the same authority as a district judge of the District of Kentucky, which included the trial court jurisdiction of a circuit court. Statutes giving the trial court jurisdiction of a circuit court to a district court were enacted for several states that had no circuit court.

In 1824, the District of Alabama was divided into the Northern and Southern Districts with a district court in each district. In 1837, the circuit court trial jurisdiction of the district courts was terminated, when Congress created a circuit court for each of the two districts of Alabama.

Also in 1837, the two districts of Alabama were placed in the Ninth Circuit. In 1838, the circuit court for the Northern District of Alabama was abolished and the circuit court trial jurisdiction of the district court for that district was restored. In 1839, the Middle District was created, in addition to the Northern and Southern Districts, and the one district judge already in place was authorized to...
