From the very beginning of its existence as a sovereign state, the United States actively engaged in the development of its international relations throughout the world. No less than other countries, the United States had no hesitation to enter into formal treaties.

Because disclosure and transparency are important cornerstones of the U.S. Constitution, treaties and international executive agreements (with few exceptions in the case of executive agreements) were promptly made public. Eventually, they began to be published on a regular basis. Unfortunately, for almost 200 years access to them was limited because nobody bothered to provide a comprehensive index to them. As the number of treaties and executive international agreements grew, researching them became increasingly more difficult. Something had to be done to create better access to these important and valuable documents of the United States foreign relations.

This comprehensive collection brings together information on more than 22,750 treaties and agreements entered into by the United States since 1776 and is conveniently indexed in five unique ways:

- Numerically
- Chronologically
- By Country
- By Subject
- By Geographical Subject

All official treaty series are included:

1. Treaty Series (TS)
2. Executive Agreement Series (EAS)
3. Treaties and Other International Acts Series (TIAS)
4. Treaties and Agreements unpublished by the United States (AD) from 1776-1950
5. Current Treaties and Agreements not yet published in TIAS (KAV)

This collection provides information, if available, on each treaty by: Treaty number, subject, country, short-title, description of treaty, signing date, source for the treaties with citations to UST, UNTS, TIF, Statutes at Large, Malloy (including Redman and Trenwith), Miller and Bevans; amending and extending information, in-force information, legislative histories, multilateral parties, other pertinent dates such as effective dates and ratification dates. This resource is the most complete and comprehensive indexing found anywhere!
