

Selden Society Supplementary Series

The Men of Court 1440 to 1550 A Prosopography of the Inns of Court and Chancery and the Courts of Law

Compiled by Sir John Baker

Volume 18 in the Selden Society Supplementary Series!

About The Men of Court 1440 to 1550

This monumental work in two very large volumes is a biographical dictionary of every named person connected with the law: all known members of the inns of court and chancery (which included many non-lawyers), and all the attorneys and officers of the central courts. A veritable Who's Who in the Law during this important transitional period, with well over 10,000 entries identifying as far as possible each individual, and with information relating to his social position, family, local roots, armorial bearings, and portraits; and going back before 1440 or after 1550 where a life extended beyond the qualifying period.

Much of the information, never before published, has been gleaned from suits for dues brought by the inns against their members, supplemented from the inns' own records, the plea rolls and other sources. No such richly-detailed survey for any class in society at this period has ever been attempted. It will be of immense value not only to legal historians, but also for research into the gentry, professional classes and office-holders, and education, genealogy and topography.

The two volumes contain a total of 1,858 pages. The entries, in double-column, are preceded by a 54-page introduction and 140 pages of appendices. There are 48 plates of illustrations, half of them in colour. The two volumes are case-bound in maroon cloth uniform with the series, and with dust-jackets showing two of the coloured plates.

About the Selden Society Supplementary Series

The Selden Society is the only learned society and publisher devoted entirely to English legal history. This includes the history of the law, the development of legal ideas, the legal profession, the courts and legal institutions, individual judges and lawyers, legal literature and records, the languages of the law, legal portraiture and costume; in short, researching the history of everything which is characteristic of our unique English common law and legal system. And because for most of the nation's history, the only continuous records have been legal records, there is in them a wealth of incidental information on every aspect of contemporary life and conditions to be found in no other source.

The Society was founded in 1887 by Frederic William Maitland, with the support of the judges, the Inns of Court, the universities and the legal profession, in England, the United States and other countries. Queen Victoria was its first Patron and it continues to enjoy royal patronage.

The volume provides the fullest account of the courts in this formative period of the common law as revealed in the extensive surviving records; with a detailed account of the records themselves and their hazardous history. They bring to life that early generation of common law judges, their work and careers, not only on the bench but also in their personal, family and property affairs: Stephen of Seagrave, William of York, Henry of Bratton ('Bracton'), the royal steward John of Lexington, Jeremy of Caxton, Henry de la Mare, Nicholas de la Tour; and Henry of Bath, whose trial for corruption was the first judicial scandal in English history.
